They deserved what they got the first time. I know Bush is big business but years down the road the Department of Justice doesn't want to be remembered as the one who had an opportunity to check Microsoft but didn't. Technology is too important to put all the eggs in one basket. While you guys are at it, you have better get some laws passed that will hold software developers liable for holds the leave in software. Microsoft is the most unsecured operating system in the world. It's the most susceptible to viruses. When you find China has had access to our computers for the years it will not play well with the news media.
